WHETHER there be any country in Chriſtendom more capable of improvement than America?

2. Whether we are not as far before other nations with reſpect to natural advantages, as we are hind them with reſpect to arts and induſtry?

3. Whether a national bank would not at ce ſecure our properties, put an end to uſury, cilitate commerce, ſupply the want of coin, and oduce ready payments in all parts of the United ates?

4. Whether we are ſufficiently ſenſible of the culiar ſecurity there is in having a bank, that nſiſts of land and paper, one of which cannot exported, and the other is in no danger of ing exported?

5. Whether there may not be found a people, ho ſo contrive as to be impoveriſhed by their ade, and whether we are that people?

6. Whether it would not be better for this ountry, if all our fine folk of both ſexes were hipped off, to remain in foreign countries, rather han they ſhould ſpend their eſtates at home in oreign luxury, and ſpread the contagion thereof hrough their native land?

7. Whether thoſe men who move the corner ones of a conſtitution, may not pull an old ouſe on their own heads?

8. Whether there be any thing perfect under he ſun, and, whether it be not with the world s with a particular ſtate, and with a ſtate or body olitic as with the human body, which lives nd moves under various indiſpoſitions, perfect ealth being never or ſeldom to be found?

9. Whether, therefore, a legiſlator ſhould be content with a vulgar ſhare of knowledge? Whether he ſhould not be a perſon of reflection and thought, who had made it his ſtudy to underſtand the true nature and intereſt of mankind, how to guide men's humours and paſſions; how to incite their active powers, how to make their ſeveral talents co-operate to the mutual benefit of each other, and the general good of the whole?

11. Whether there ſhould not be erected, in each ſtate, an hoſpital for orphans and foundlings at the expence of old batchelors?

15. Whether criminals in the freeſt country may not forfeit their liberty, and repair the damage they have done to the public by hard labour?

16. Whether the view of criminals, chained in pairs, and kept at hard labour would not be very edifying to the multitude?

17. Whether the want of ſuch an inſtitution be not plainly ſeen in different parts of America, where the diſbelief of a future ſtate hardeneth rogues againſt the fear of death, and where, through the great growth of robbers and houſe-breakers, it becomes every day more neceſſary?

18. Whether felons are not often ſpared, and therefore encouraged, by the compaſſion of thoſe who proſecute them?

19. Whether many that would not take away the life of a thief, may not nevertheleſs be willing to bring him to a more adequate puniſhment?

20. Whether there is any country in Chriſtendom, either kingdom or republic, dependent or independent, free or enſlaved, which may not afford us an uſeful leſſon?

21. Whether all circulation be not like a circulation of credit, whatſoever medium (metal or paper) is employed, and whether gold be any more than credit for ſo much power?

22. Whether the wealth of the richeſt nations in Chriſtendom doth not conſiſt in paper, vaſtly more than in gold and ſilver?

23. Whether the prejudices about gold and ſilver are not ſtrong, but whether they are not ſtill prejudices?

24. Whether paper doth not by its ſtamp and ſignature acquire a local value, and become as precious and as ſcarce as gold? And whether it be not much fitter to circulate large ſums, and therefore preferable to gold?

PARIS, May 13.

THE affair of the Chevalier de la Touche is now on trial. It is given out that he will be capitally convicted, but that his puniſhment will be changed to perpetual impriſonment.

LONDON, May 28.

Large ſums of money have been ſent over from Holland within theſe few days, in conſequence of the ſtorm which threatens them in every quarter.

The uniform of the buff and blue which diſtinguiſhes Mr. Fox's party, was worn by the American army during the whole war. Mr Fox meant, no doubt, when he adopted that uniform, to pay a compliment to his old friend General Waſhington.

In a company in which the Prince of Wales and Earl Temple happened, ſome time ſince to meet, the converſation turned on faſhionable amuſements. The Prince having mentioned the ſeverity of Mr. Pitt's life, as being rather reproachful to him; his Lordſhip ſubjoined, "I muſt own, Sir, he is no fiddler, nor is he remarkable for his ſpirit at betting, or for his knowledge of the laws of Farro; but in lieu of theſe things, he knows how to convert a declining ſtate into a proſperous one."

June 12. A letter from Naples, dated May 11, ſays, "Mount Veſuvius has been in a dreadful ſtate of fermentation for ſeveral days; and the firſt eruption was yeſterday evening, when tremendous torrents of fire iſſued from the fiſſures of the Mount."

By advice from Poland we hear, that on the 7th of April the Montengrins, who have revolted againſt their ſovereign the Grand Signior, gave battle on the banks of the Marizza, to 40,000 Janniſſaries, Arnots and Tamariots, led by Begler Bey, of Upper Albany; the latter were defeated. After the action, the conquerors deſpoil'ed the dead, and thus caught the infection of the Plague, which then raged in the Turkiſh army.

A letter from St. Ubes brings advice, that the United States, Capt. Franklin, an American ſhip going into that harbour, was run foul of by a Portugueſe frigate, and was overſet, and entirely loſt; that complaint being made againſt the Captain of the frigate, being ſent to Liſbon for his careleſsneſs, orders were iſſued out, that reſtitution ſhould be made for both ſhip and cargo. The crew were ſaved.

The Prince of Wales and Duc de Chartres diſmounted, yeſterday afternoon in Hyde-Park, and walked arm in arm for ſome time in Kenſington Gardens. The Prince appeared rather pale, and Monſ. le Duc very rubified. It was obſerved the Heir of Great-Britain had taken up with the lillies of France, and reſigned the roſe of England to the Prince of Bourbon.

LONDON, May 28.

Extract of a letter from Bruſſels, April 27.

"Theſe are diſaſterous times for eccleſiaſtical foundations; eight priories and convents have had the Emperor's ſentence of reform, or rather annihilation, pronounced! Theſe of Groenendael and Rouge Cloitre have already met their fate, though very rich. When it was known that the Commiſſioners were come to put their order in execution, 200 peaſants not only plundered all the furniture they could come at, but drove off the cattle and live ſtock for their own emolument."

The Emperor's famous Mechanic in Moravia who has invented machines that have rendered his name known to all Europe, has added a new one to the number, which is likely to come into univerſal uſe. It is fixed into boats to row them, by which one man will impel a boat along with as much rapidity as 12 men with common oars could do. The Emperor was preſent when it was tried in the Danube, and with ſuch ſucceſs that he gave the Artiſt 200 guineas immediately.

On Wedneſday the Captains of the Hudſon's Bay Company's ſhips took leave of the Directors, in order to proceed immediately to their ſtations at Hudſon's Bay.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Antwerp, to his friend in London.

"Of all the princes in Europe, none ſeem more ſteadily to promote the happneſs of their ſubjects than the Emperor. In all his ſchemes and projects he is cautious and deliberate, but reſolute and perſevering: he ſeems determined to reſtore Antwerp to its ancient ſplendor, when it was the emporium of the European continent, though lately celebrated only for its convents and nunneries, its pictures, tapeſtry, and thread lace ſhops, &c. About 200 years ſince, the Dutch taking advantage of the weakneſs in the Auſtrian government, ſunk ſeveral large ſhips, laden with ſtones in the mouth of the Scheld river which comes up to this city; and in 1584 they built Fort Lillo, and to ſupport their invention of carrying all the trade of Antwerp to Amſterdam, oppoſite to Lillo the Emperor is raiſing Fort Joſeph. The Dutch will in all probability pay for their former treachery and cruelty to the inhabitants of Antwerp, who were their confederates in the cauſe of liberty. Several eminent traders and merchants arrive in this city daily to ſettle in it."

JUNE 12.

The annual meeting of the Quakers in London at Whitſuntide, is productive of various advantages to the metropolis; they lay out a conſiderable ſum of money among tradeſmen for ſubſtantial articles of apparel, houſhold furniture, and other neceſſaries for their country uſe and wear; they ſet a laudable example of neatneſs of dreſs, modeſty in manners, and purity in converſation, well worthy of the attention of our young men and women in general; they alſo annually at this period compoſe a ſimple but judicious literary admonition, which they cauſe to be printed for public peruſal; in this tract are contained a ſtrict inveſtigation of the decline or riſe of religion and morality, of happineſs and commerce among their countrymen! They point out the reaſons of our ſucceſſes and misfortunes, ſhewing wherein we have been right, and wherein we have been wrong; and adviſing us to adhere to the path of piety and prudence, while they warn us againſt ſtraying into thoſe of infidelity and diſſipation. A people ſo diſpoſed, and ſo conducting themſelves, muſt attract, as they certainly challenge, univerſal admiration. They are bleſſings to the State were they dwell, correcting the manners of the people, diffuſing the ſpirit of peace and happineſs among the human race, and promoting commerce and induſtry upon the moſt equitable and juſt terms, between buyer and ſeller, maſter and ſervant, and all the relative and ſocial connections, which ſhould unite and bind mankind.

Extract of a letter from Portſmouth, June 10.

"Arrived the Marquis de Seignelly ſloop of war from Plymouth. Juſt now came up Commodore Hotham with his Majeſty's ſhips Gibraltar, Buſſard and Hound, from the Eaſt-Indies."

ANECDOTE.

AT Lyons in France, during the adminiſtration of Cardinal Richlieu, a Gentleman named Bonneval, being condemned to death, as they were carrying him to execution, ſaw a courier belonging to the Cardinal paſs by. Bonneval told the officers that he had a ſecret of the laſt importance to communicate to the courier, which concerned the State in general, and the Miniſter in particular to whom he belonged; he obtained leave to ſpeak to him, and, when the courier approached, he told him, 'that he had a ſecret which he could not communicate to any but the Cardinal himſelf.' The courier applied to the Grand Provoſt of the town, who remanded him back to priſon; and the courier poſted to Paris, and acquainted the Cardinal, who ordered Bonneval directly to Paris.

When he was brought before the Cardinal who demanded of him what he had to reveal, 'My Lord, ſaid he, pardon the preſumption of a man, who, on the brink of death, had no other way to eſcape the gulph before him—the ſight of your courier juſt in that fatal moment put a deſign into my head, which, before, I had not a thought of—I impoſed on him and the Grand Provoſt, flattering myſelf, that, if I was permitted to come into your Eminence's preſence, I ſhould obtain favour; if not, at leaſt I ſhould die the better pleaſed in having once in my life beheld the man whoſe fame the world is ſo full of.' The Cardinal could not help admiring the ready wit of the man, and judging by his ſpirit in this, that he was capable of being ſerviceable in any other affair committed to his care, he ſpoke to the King, Lewis XIIIth, and obtained his pardon. Bonneval, being ſet at liberty, went to return thanks to his preſerver, aſſuring him, that the life he had redeemed ſhould be ever devoted to him. The Cardinal, who perfectly knew mankind, approved of him, and afterwards employed him in many things, which he executed to his ſatisfaction.

PHILADELPHIA, July 28.

Saturday laſt the brigantine Bloodhound, Capt. Rawbottom, arrived here in eight weeks from London.

In the above veſſel arrived a number of reſpectable paſſengers, among which Charles Varlo, Eſq; Governor and Proprietor (agreeable to charter) of New-Albion, which Province includes Long-Iſland, and forty leagues ſquare in the Jerſies.

It is very remarkable that this is only the third Governor, ſince King Charles the firſt granted the charter.—Earl of Albion, the ſecond Governor, being killed by the Indians, the copy of the charter was loſt, and even the name of the Province forgot, till the preſent heir, being a Peer of Ireland, found the original charter regiſtered among the records of that kingdom.

The preſent Governor we are told, is a natural genius, and a literary man—having invented many improvements in agriculture; and is alſo the author of a valuable work, called "The New Syſtem of Huſbandry;" and has alſo employed his pen in defence of the Americans in the late conteſt.

The following account of the important cauſe of the Chevalier de Longchamps, is taken from the Courier de l'Amerique, publiſhed in this city.

WE take the firſt opportunity of laying before the public the particulars of the proſecution againſt the Chevalier de Longchamps, which have been communicated to us by his learned counſel, and other perſons who have had it in their power to procure the beſt information. This affair is one of thoſe which intereſt every ſovereign and every community, and will make a remarkable æra in the hiſtory of the law of nations. We could have wiſhed to have joined to this account the ſuggeſtions which we expected to receive from the Conſul-General himſelf, or the lawyers employed on the part of the State; but the Conſul of France has given us to underſtand that this being an affair between the King his maſter and the United States, it was not in his power to intermeddle in our publication, that he would obſerve an equal indifference upon whatever might be publiſhed concerning it, and leave it to the Congreſs and the United States, to redreſs any irregularity that might in this caſe be committed.

The Chevalier de Longchamps, formerly a Lieutenant of horſe in the ſervice of France, having taken up his reſidence for ſome time in this city, fell in love with a young lady, an orphan, of a reſpectable family, and heireſs to a competent fortune. By his attention and aſſiduities he gained her affections and ſoon after married her. Her guardian, a rigid Quaker, and ſome others of her relations, were highly diſpleaſed with this match. They formed a party againſt the Chevalier de Longchamps, and the news-papers were full of ſatirical pieces, where, although he was not named, it could plainly be ſeen he was the perſon pointed at. His birth in particular was attacked, and an origin as baſe as ridiculous was attributed to him. To put an end to theſe ſcandalous reports, which even generally reflected on the whole French nation, Mr. de Longchamps thought the beſt meaſure would be to get his titles authenticated and made public. In conſequence he went with his ſeveral brevets and commiſſions to Mr. de Marbois, Conſul General of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and Secretary to the French Embaſſy, and requeſted him upon examination of theſe papers to be pleaſed to certify their authenticity. Monſieur de Marbois, for reaſons which he did not think proper to mention, refuſed the demand of Mr. de Longchamps, who fell in a paſſion, and, after ſome warm expreſſions, went away, uttering theſe words, which were overheard by ſeveral perſons, and have ſince made a principal point in the proceedings, Mr. Conſul, I will diſhonor you.

M. de Marbois complained in writing to the Preſident of the Executive Council of the State, who adviſed him to avail himſelf of the ſecurities which the law offers to citizens in ſimilar caſes, by binding over Mr. de Longchamps, together with reſponſible ſureties for his future good behaviour. This expedient Mr. de Marbois rejected, as derogatory to his character, and would not owe his ſecurity to any thing but the law of nations. The Preſident however ſent for Mr. de Longchamps to his houſe, and ſhewing himſelf indeed the Father of the Commonwealth, he employed every means which his conciliating ſpirit could ſuggeſt to prevail upon this citizen to keep within the bounds which the law preſcribes, but could not obtain the ſolemn promiſe which he required from him, to forbear any violence againſt the perſonage inveſted, as Mr. de Marbois, with a reſpectable character, and protected by the law of nations.

Mr. de Longchamps, inflamed with rage, ſought the favourable opportunity of avenging himſelf for the conduct which Mr. de Marbois had held towards him; this occaſion preſented itſelf a few days after. On the 19th of May laſt Mr. de Longchamps meeting the Conſul in Front-ſtreet, fiercely advanced up to him and demanded the reaſon of his refuſal. Mr. de Marbois anſwered him, "I am not anſwerable to you for my conduct, if you are a Frenchman, addreſs yourſelf to our common ſovereign, if an American, it is the magiſtrates of Pennſylvania or the Congreſs who will procure you ſatisfaction."—This prudent anſwer did not ſatisfy Mr. de Longchamps; he gave vent to his paſſion in words, and at laſt came to blows, by ſtriking his cane over the one which M. de Marbois held in his hand. The latter returned the ſtroke and ſeveral blows were given on both ſides before they could be ſeparated. This was not accompliſhed without difficulty; the Sieur de Longchamps was now become furious, and while his arms were held, he kicked at his opponent, who having called upon ſome of the by-ſtanders, to be ready for giving evidence, walked off.

His firſt ſtep was to make his complaint to the Chevalier de la Luzerne, Miniſter Plenipotentiary of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, who immediately, in the name of the King his maſter, demanded juſtice for this outrage, from the Supreme Executive Council of Pennſylvania. He demanded that Mr. de Longchamps ſhould be inſtantly delivered up to him, as a ſubject of the King of France, calling himſelf an officer in his ſervice, and wearing the uniform of his troops. Council was at firſt aſtoniſhed at this requiſition, which was the more embarraſſing as Mr. de Longchamps had ſome time before taken the oath of allegiance to the Commonwealth. Beſides, even ſuppoſing that he remained a ſubject of France, the right of ſovereigns to deliver up their guilty ſubjects to one another did by no means appear to be eſtabliſhed by the law of nations, and ſtill leſs by the municipal laws of this State; and however this might be, the Executive Council cannot conſider itſelf as the ſovereign of Pennſylvania.

Extract of a letter from Bruſſels, April 27.

"These are diſaſterous times for eccleſiaſtical foundations; eight priories and convents have had the Emperor's ſentence of reform, or rather annihilation, pronounced! Thoſe of Groenendael and Rouge Cloitre have already met their fate, though very rich. When it was known that the Commiſſioners were come to put their order in execution, 200 peaſants not only plundered all the furniture they could come at, but drove off the cattle and live ſtock for their own emolument."

The Emperor's famous Mechanic in Moravia who has invented machines that have rendered his name known to all Europe, has added a new one to the number, which is likely to come into univerſal uſe. It is fixed into boats to row them, by which one man will impel a boat along with as much rapidity as 12 men with common oars could do. The Emperor was preſent when it was tried in the Danube, and with ſuch ſucceſs that he gave the Artiſt 200 guineas immediately.

On Wedneſday the Captains of the Hudſon's Bay Company's ſhips took leave of the Directors, in order to proceed immediately to their ſtations at Hudſon's Bay.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Antwerp, to his friend in London.

"Of all the princes in Europe, none ſeem more ſteadily to promote the happneſs of their ſubjects than the Emperor. In all his ſchemes and projects he is cautious and deliberate, but reſolute and perſevering: he ſeems determined to reſtore Antwerp to its ancient ſplendor, when it was the emporium of the European continent, though lately celebrated only for its convents and nunneries, its pictures, tapeſtry, and thread lace ſhops, &c. About 200 years ſince, the Dutch taking advantage of the weakneſs in the Auſtrian government, ſunk ſeveral large ſhips, laden with ſtones in the mouth of the Scheld river which comes up to this city; and in 1584 they built Fort Lillo, as it to ſupport their intention of carrying all the trade of Antwerp to Amſterdam; oppoſite to Lillo the Emperor is raiſing Fort Joſeph. The Dutch will in all probability pay for their former treachery and cruelty to the inhabitants of Antwerp, who were their confederates in the cauſe of liberty. Several eminent traders and merchants arrive in this city daily to ſettle in it."

The annual meeting of the Quakers in London at Whitſuntide, is productive of various advantages to the metropolis; they lay out a conſiderable ſum of money among tradeſmen for ſubſtantial articles of apparel, houſhold furniture, and other neceſſaries for their country uſe and wear; they ſet a laudable example of neatneſs of dreſs, modeſty in manners, and purity in converſation, well worthy of the attention of our young men and women in general; they alſo annually at this period compoſe a ſimple but judicious literary admonition, which they cauſe to be printed for public peruſal; in this tract are contained a ſtrict inveſtigation of the decline or riſe of religion and morality, of happineſs and commerce among their countrymen! They point out the reaſons of our ſucceſſes and misfortunes, ſhewing wherein we have been right, and wherein we have been wrong; and adviſing us to adhere to the paths of piety and prudence, while they warn us againſt ſtraying into thoſe of infidelity and diſſipation. They are bleſſings to the State were they dwell, correcting the manners of the people, diffuſing the ſpirit of peace and happineſs among the human race, and promoting commerce and induſtry upon the moſt equitable and juſt terms, between buyer and ſeller, maſter and ſervant, and all the relative and ſocial connections, which ſhould unite and bind mankind.

ANECDOTE.

AT Lyons in France, during the adminiſtration of Cardinal Richlieu, a Gentleman named Bonneval, being condemned to death, as they were carrying him to execution, ſaw a courier belonging to the Cardinal paſs by. Bonneval told the officers that he had a ſecret of the laſt importance to communicate to the courier, which concerned the State in general, and the Miniſter in particular to whom he belonged; he obtained leave to ſpeak to him, and, when the courier approached, he told him, 'that he had a ſecret which he could not communicate to any but the Cardinal himſelf.' The courier applied to the Grand Provoſt of the town, who remanded him back to priſon; and the courier poſted to Paris, and acquainted the Cardinal, who ordered Bonneval directly to Paris.

When he was brought before the Cardinal who demanded of him what he had to reveal, 'My Lord, ſaid he, pardon the preſumption of a man, who, on the brink of death, had no other way to eſcape the gulph before him—the ſight of your courier juſt in that fatal moment put a deſign into my head, which, before, I had not a thought of—I impoſed on him and the Grand Provoſt, flattering myſelf, that, if I was permitted to come into your Eminence's preſence, I ſhould obtain favour; if not, at leaſt I ſhould die the better pleaſed in having once in my life beheld the man whoſe fame the world is ſo full of.' The Cardinal could not help admiring the ready wit of the man, and judging by his ſpirit in this, that he was capable of being ſerviceable in any other affair committed to his care, he ſpoke to the King, Lewis XIIIth, and obtained his pardon. Bonneval, being ſet at liberty, went to return thanks to his preſerver, aſſuring him, that the life he had redeemed ſhould be ever devoted to him. The Cardinal, who perfectly knew mankind, approved of him, and afterwards employed him in many things, which he executed to his ſatisfaction.

PHILADELPHIA, July 28.

Saturday laſt the brigantine Bloodhound, Capt. Rawbottom, arrived here in eight weeks from London.

In the above veſſel arrived a number of reſpectable paſſengers, among which Charles Varlo, Eſq; Governor and Proprietor (agreeable to charter) of New-Albion, which Province includes Long-Iſland, and forty leagues ſquare in the Jerſies.

It is very remarkable that this is only the third Governor, ſince King Charles the firſt granted the charter,—Earl of Albion, the ſecond Governor, being killed by the Indians, the copy of the charter was loſt, and even the name of the Province forgot, till the preſent heir, being a Peer of Ireland, found the original charter regiſtered among the records of that Kingdom.

The preſent Governor we are told, is a natural genius, and a literary man—having invented many improvements in agriculture; and is alſo the author of a valuable work, called "The New Syſtem of Huſbandry;" and has alſo employed his pen in defence of the Americans in the late conteſt.

The following account of the important cauſe of the Chevalier de Longchamps, is taken from the Courier de l'Amerique, publiſhed in this city.

WE take the firſt opportunity of laying before the public the particulars of the proſecution againſt the Chevalier de Longchamps, which have been communicated to us by his learned council, and other perſons who have had it in their power to procure the beſt information. This affair is one of thoſe which intereſt every ſovereign and every community, and will make a remarkable æra in the hiſtory of the law of nations. We could have wiſhed to have joined to this account the ſuggeſtions which we expected to receive from the Conſul-General himſelf, or the lawyers employed on the part of the State; but the Conſul of France has given us to underſtand that this being an affair between the King his maſter and the United States, it was not in his power to intermeddle in our publication, that he would obſerve an equal indifference upon whatever might be publiſhed concerning it, and leave it to the Congreſs and the United States, to redreſs any irregularity that might in this caſe be committed.

The Chevalier de Longchamps, formerly a Lieutenant of horſe in the ſervice of France, having taken up his reſidence for ſome time in this city, fell in love with a young lady, an orphan, of a reſpectable family, and heireſs to a competent fortune. By his attention and aſſiduities he gained her affections and ſoon after married her. Her guardian, a rigid Quaker, and ſome others of her relations, were highly diſpleaſed with this match. They formed a party againſt the Chevalier de Longchamps, and the news-papers were full of ſatirical pieces, where, although he was not named, it could plainly be ſeen he was the perſon pointed at. His birth in particular was atacked, and an origin as baſe as ridiculous was attributed to him. To put an end to theſe ſcandalous reports, which even generally reflected on the whole French nation, Mr. de Longchamps thought the beſt meaſure would be to get his titles authenticated and made public. In conſequence he went with his ſeveral brevets and commiſſions to Mr. de Marbois, Conſul General of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, and Secretary to the French Embaſſy, and requeſted him upon examination of theſe papers to be pleaſed to certify their authenticity. Monſieur de Marbois, for reaſons which he did not think proper to mention, refuſed the demand of Mr. de Longchamps, who fell in a paſſion, and, after ſome warm expreſſions, went away, uttering theſe words, which were overheard by ſeveral perſons, and have ſince made a principal point in the proceedings, Mr. Conſul, I will diſhonor you.

M. de Marbois complained in writing to the Preſident of the Executive Council of the State, who adviſed him to avail himſelf of the ſecurities which the law offers to citizens in ſimilar caſes, by binding over Mr. de Longchamps, together with reſponſible ſureties for his future good behaviour. This expedient Mr. de Marbois rejected, as derogatory to his character, and would not owe his ſecurity to any thing but the law of nations. The Preſident however ſent for Mr. de Longchamps to his houſe, and ſhewing himſelf indeed the Father of the Commonwealth, he employed every means which his conciliating ſpirit could ſuggeſt to prevail upon this citizen to keep within the bounds which the law preſcribes, but could not obtain the ſolemn promiſe which he required from him, to forbear any violence againſt a perſonage inveſted, as Mr. de Marbois, with a reſpectable character, and protected by the law of nations.

Mr. de Longchamps, inflamed with rage, ſought the favourable opportunity of avenging himſelf for the conduct which Mr. de Marbois had held towards him; this occaſion preſented itſelf a few days after. On the 19th of May laſt Mr. de Longchamps meeting the Conſul in Front-ſtreet, fiercely advanced up to him and demanded the reaſon of his refuſal. Mr. de Marbois anſwered him, "I am not anſwerable to you for my conduct, if you are a Frenchman, addreſs yourſelf to our common ſovereign, if an American, it is the magiſtrates of Pennſylvania or the Congreſs who will procure you ſatisfaction."—This prudent anſwer did not ſatisfy Mr. de Longchamps; he gave vent to his paſſion in words, and at laſt came to blows, by ſtriking his cane over the one which M. de Marbois held in his hand. The latter returned the ſtroke and ſeveral blows were given on both ſides before they could be ſeparated. This was not accompliſhed without difficulty; the Sieur de Longchamps was now become furious, and while his arms were held, he kicked at his opponent, who having called upon ſome of the by-ſtanders, to be ready for giving evidence, walked off.

His firſt ſtep was to make his complaint to the Chevalier de la Luzerne, Miniſter Plenipotentiary of his Moſt Chriſtian Majeſty, who immediately, in the name of the King his maſter, demanded juſtice for this outrage, from the Supreme Executive Council of Pennſylvania. He demanded that Mr. de Longchamps ſhould be inſtantly delivered up to him, as a ſubject of the King of France, calling himſelf an officer in his ſervice, and wearing the uniform of his troops. Council was at firſt aſtoniſhed at this requiſition, which was the more embarraſſing as Mr. de Longchamps had ſome time before taken the oath of allegiance to the Commonwealth. Beſides, even ſuppoſing that he remained a ſubject of France, the right of ſovereigns to deliver up their guilty ſubjects to one another did by no means appear to be eſtabliſhed by the law of nations, and ſtill leſs by the municipal laws of this State; and however this might be, the Executive Council cannot conſider itſelf as the ſovereign of Pennſylvania.

A letter from Halifax, dated the 4th instant, says, "There is a French man of war now in our harbour: she has come to get liberty to carry coals from Spanish river to St. Peter's; but whether she has, or will, obtain that privilege, is not yet determined. They were cordially received by the Governor and Commodore."

The Virginia Gazette informs that the senate of that State, on the 26th of June had gone into a legislative refusal of paying British debts, until after the restoration of the Negroes taken from the inhabitants of that State during the course of the war—The House divided twelve against seven—The minority protested against the measure, and have given nine spirited reasons for their dissent.
